

Call for proposals

Melland Schill Studies in International Law

Melland Schill Studies has become a home for exceptional academic work from around the world. Under the stewardship of new editors, this venerable series has been given renewed vigour. The series editors invite proposals that represent the very best scholarship in international law to join this expanding list.

Editors: Iain Scobbie (iain.scobbie@manchester.ac.uk) and Jean d'Aspremont (jean.daspremont@manchester.ac.uk)

Recent highlights

Sara De Vido, Violence against women's health in international law (2020)

'Impressive and invaluable. This is sure to become the landmark work on the topic.'

Shuichi Furuya

'A compelling explanation.'

Dianne Otto

Melland Schill Perspectives on International Law

Established to reflect the diversity of international legal scholarship worldwide, this inclusive series offers a platform for scholars from different regions who adopt innovative approaches to new and old topics. The series is founded on the idea that every international legal issue should be debated from various and, at times, incommensurable perspectives. Diversity in international legal debates and practice is often obfuscated by prevailing Eurocentric and positivist narratives, which not only create difficulties for non-Western scholars to be heard but hinder the development of different approaches. The series editors invite thought-provoking and reflective studies on legal, social, economic, or political topics to join this exciting new series.

Editors: Jean d'Aspremont

(jean.daspremont@manchester.ac.uk), Iain Scobbie (iain.scobbie@manchester.ac.uk) and Sufyan Droubi (s.eldroubi@dundee.ac.uk)

Recent highlights

Yenkong Ngangjoh Hodu and Makane Moïse Mbengue (eds), African perspectives in international investment law (2020)

Sufyan Droubi and Jean d'Aspremont (eds), International organisations, non-State actors, and the formation of customary international law (2020)